Over half of Finns oppose footage collected secretly by animal rights activists on fur farms, according to results of a survey released by the Finnish Broadcasting Company's (YLE) current affairs programme, Ajankohtainen kakkonen, on Tuesday evening.

Around 40 per cent of those surveyed had a positive attitude to the footage.

However, in the same survey 86 per cent of respondents answered that they believe in animal welfare, whereas only 15 per cent responded to the same question that they had only little or no interest in the matter.
